Addressing and preparing for the consequences of the global energy transition

As the planet's leaders work to address global climate change, no effort is more front and centre than the global energy transition. We are in the midst of an unprecedented transition toward zero and low carbon energy, on the cusp of breakthrough technologies and addressing the impacts to economies that have been built around generations of fossil fuel development. At the same time, the focus on ensuring that everyone has access to reliable, affordable and sustainable energy has never been more important. This panel will provide insight into broader ramifications of the energy transition; the intersection of environmental, social and governance considerations and sustainable finance, corporate climate governance, litigation; and carbon markets and the role of law and lawyers.

Moderators

Florencia Heredia Allende Brea, Buenos Aires; Vice-Chair, IBA Energy, Environment, Natural Resources and Infrastructure Law Section (SEERIL)

Keeping the lights on – oil and gas development in a low-carbon world

We exist in the era of decarbonisation and energy transition, where the impacts and experiences vary widely across jurisdictions. In recent years, the trend against funding oil and gas projects has grown, and the uncertainty of investment has contributed to commodity price volatility and heightened concerns regarding energy supply and security in the mid-to-long term. This volatility and rapidly rising commodity prices have been exacerbated recently by Russia's invasion of Ukraine, with associated sanctions and turmoil in energy markets. These market realities are broadly impacting resource exporting and consuming countries, energy companies, workers, consumers and the global economy. While there is widely-accepted recognition that energy transition must happen, global unrest and market realities are demonstrating that it also needs to occur in an orderly and properly-paced fashion that is economically and politically sustainable in order to mitigate adverse outcomes.

This panel will explore the balancing act of keeping the oil and gas industry healthy and stable in an era of transition, covering the following topics:

- The need to continue to support the development of oil and gas projects that are aligned with current and future climate standards
- The regulatory trends to accelerate the reduction of carbon emissions and achieve the right pace of energy transition, while ensuring the 'lights stay on' and other sustainable development goals are also met. We will explore possible best practices to promote the energy transition in different jurisdictions, discussing the impacts of energy poverty and energy security, who will bear the costs of energy transition, and the need to reconcile the demand for development with the demand for decarbonisation.
- How sophisticated oil and gas companies are adapting their strategies and balancing their ESG priorities with increased focus on maintaining social and environmental stewardship, reducing greenhouse gas emissions and aligning with current and future climate standards. The role of ESG lawyers in support of this process.
- The manner in which M&A and investment strategies are evolving in the sector. We will also discuss the potential negative repercussions of divestment and moving high carbon assets out of the hands of current owners into less accountable ones, and the opportunities presented by different groups of buyers.

Resilience in energy, infrastructure and natural resources law: examining legal pathways for sustainability in times of disruption

Extreme weather events including floods, wildfires, hurricanes and other natural disasters have become both more frequent and more severe, while events such as the Covid-19 pandemic represent a global threat to public health with huge economic effects that recovery packages tried to address. These disruptive events, alone and in combination, have dramatic consequences on nature, human life and the economy, calling for urgent action to mitigate their causes and adapt to their impacts.

The latest book by the SEERIL Academic Advisory Group (AAG) uses the concept of 'resilience' as a common framework for the interpretation and development of energy, infrastructure and natural resources law in the response to nature-based disruptions. It offers a systematic review of the legal responses provided at international, national and entity level, both from a public and private law perspective. It proposes a forward-looking analysis of how the concept of resilience could be understood better, so that our world may be strengthened and better prepared for disruptions and disasters that may yet come our way. During this session, AAG authors will present the main conclusions from the book.

The future of the electric system

Governments around the world have made major commitments to reduce dependence on fossil fuels and to 'electrify' everything. But current electric systems were not built to be clean or renewable, and their resilience will be tested in new ways in the face of changing demand and climate change. Clearly, as part of reducing fossil dependence, there will need to be major investments in upgrading electric generation and delivery. But with change comes challenges. How are governments, investors, utilities, project developers and consumers dealing with the competing demands for best-in-class-technology, carbon footprint reduction and reliable service at reasonable rates, and what can consumers afford or be required to pay for? Are different parts of the world addressing these issues differently? How are different legal systems promoting or hindering the transformation of the electric system?

Supercharging ecosystems: are conservation parks to become key in the future economic recovery

All around the world companies are stating their commitment to a green recovery; funds and financial entities are relying on the review of ESG factors to evaluate risks in their investments and many governments are aiming to reach their net zero pledges. This shapes how businesses and industries need to develop and what governments need to focus on in the coming years. Can natural ecosystems and wildlife conservation parks play a critical role in reducing carbon emissions and helping companies and governments reach their climate change obligations while keeping their economic growth?

This panel will answer this question by discussing if there is evidence that supercharging ecosystem carbon sinks and restoring species can indeed magnify carbon uptake as well as addressing what type of financing is needed, which governance practices are efficient and which legal framework is adequate to make it work.

Renewable fuels

It is now technologically possible to produce alternative fuels (renewable natural gas, hydrogen, synthetic fuel and refined fuels such as renewable jet fuel) from non-fossil sources such as municipal waste and biomass, and improved processes such as hydrolysis. These are recognised bridge fuels on the global energy transition to a lower carbon energy system. But the alternative fuels' low carbon analysis often is based on a life cycle comparison rather than a point of use emissions analysis. The processes that create alternative fuels may both address other problems (eg, reuse of solid and bio waste and reductions in methane emissions) and create new challenges (eg, energy used in process, disposal of by-products, water use, capital costs for building new facilities and encouraging continued dependence on high carbon energy sources). Panellists will discuss recent developments in alternative fuel regulations and deployments in their jurisdictions, how alternative fuels are viewed under ESG metrics and how alternative fuels may fit into an overall carbon reduction strategy. The panel will also consider how the cost-benefit analysis and role in the energy transition for alternative fuels might differ in advanced economies and the rest of the world.

The future of infrastructure delivery

Governments around the world have made major infrastructure investment pledges which are at the heart of their post-pandemic economic recovery plans. These include physical infrastructure but there is also a significant focus on digital infrastructure with telecoms and data being considered the fourth utility.

This brings with it a need for investment – both public and private – and governments are considering a range of new funding models to facilitate this.

Overlaying this is an increased focus on ESG. Many governments have made net zero commitments, corporates are required to make disclosures on their ESG performance and investors are putting ESG considerations at the heart of investment decisions with shareholder activism and litigation an increasing trend. Against this backdrop, this session will consider the future of infrastructure delivery – funding models, the investment environment and the impact of net zero.

Energy transition in Italy - challenges and opportunities in the European context

As climate and decarbonisation policies are gaining momentum in the EU, several European countries – including Italy – are implementing new instruments to facilitate their transition towards more sustainable energy sources. The funding of the Recovery Plan, of which Italy is the largest beneficiary, could be an important catalyst to the achievement of Italy's climate objectives. At the same time, Italy's transition faces significant obstacles in the form of changing regulations, structural constraints of the Italian energy sector and different infrastructure development between different parts of the country. Also conflicting interests and popular opposition, especially from those that see this transition as a potential threat to their wellbeing and jobs, could pose a challenge to the Italian policy-makers. At a time of increasing energy prices, when access to affordable energy has never been more important, this session explores both opportunities and challenges of the energy transition in Italy in the context of the new EU 'Fit for 55' framework and its future developments, and provides insight into the intersection of the economic, environmental and governance considerations that will accompany the transition of the country.

No deductions or withholdings

If any deductions or withholdings are required by law to be made from any fees payable to us by you under the terms contained in this 'Information' section you shall pay such sum as will, after the deduction or withholding has been made, leave us with the same amount as we would have been entitled to receive in the absence of any such requirement to make a deduction or withholding.

If we obtain the benefit of any tax credit or other relief by reference to any such deductions or withholdings, then we shall repay to you such amount as, after such repayment has been made, will leave us in no worse position than we would have been had no such deductions or withholdings been required.

Conference sell-outs

The IBA places its conferences in venues of a suitable size for each event; however, there are times when our conferences may sell out. Should this happen, prospective delegates will be informed and a waiting list will operate. The waiting list will function on a 'first come, first served' basis, subject to receiving registered delegate cancellations. The waiting list for a conference will close once it has reached ten per cent of the conference venue capacity, as it is very unlikely a place will become available. The IBA will not be liable for any travel or accommodation expenses incurred by an individual who travels to a conference without a confirmed place at the event.

Cancellation of registration

If cancellation is received in writing at the IBA office by 6 May 2022 fees will be refunded less a 25 per cent administration charge. Refunds will be made minus any monies owed to the IBA.

We regret that no refunds can be made after this date. Registrations received after 6 May 2022, will not be eligible for any refund of fees. Please note that the IBA will however offer a full refund if you are required to cancel your registration due to Covid related reasons; we will require written confirmation of your cancellation by the end of business on the first day of the conference.

Travel arrangements and visas

Participants are responsible for making their own travel arrangements. It is recommended that you check your visa requirements with your local embassy or consulate. We are unable to dispatch visa invitation letters to support your visa application prior to receipt of your registration form and full payment of registration fees.

Please apply for your visa in good time.

Unauthorised accommodation agents

It has been brought to our attention that there are multiple companies contacting past attendees, claiming to represent the IBA, offering 'assistance' with registration and hotel bookings.

They are operating by cold-calling and spamming companies whose names have appeared on previous List of Participants, Programmes and Sponsorship recognition. The only Accommodation Agent the IBA works with is Judy Lane ICS. Judy Lane ICS do not contact delegates on behalf of the IBA without delegates making initial contact. Please ignore any communication that does not come directly from the IBA or Judy Lane ICS.

Disabled access

The Bocconi School of Law is wheelchair accessible. Please notify us if you require special assistance.

International Bar Association

the global voice of the legal profession

The International Bar Association (IBA), established in 1947, is the world's leading organisation of international legal practitioners, bar associations, law firms and law societies.

The IBA influences the development of international law reform and shapes the future of the legal profession throughout the world. It has a membership of more than 80,000 individual lawyers and more than 190 bar associations and law societies spanning over 170 countries.

Inspired by the vision of the United Nations, the IBA was founded in the same spirit, just before the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was proclaimed in 1948.

The IBA covers all practice areas and professional interests, providing members with access to leading experts and up-to date information, enabling them to better represent their clients' interests.

Through its various committees, fora and task forces, the IBA facilitates the exchange of information and views among its members as to laws, practices and professional responsibilities relating to the practice of law around the globe.

Energy, Environment, Natural Resources and Infrastructure Law Section (SEERIL) Overview

The Section is composed at present of six subject matter committees: Environment, Health and Safety Law; International Construction Projects; Mining Law; Oil and Gas Law; Power Law; and Water Law.

These committees publish newsletters to keep members informed of significant developments within their subject matter discipline. They may also hold their own specialty conferences. You will find us actively participating in all IBA annual meeting programme activities, putting on cutting edge programmes designed to inform and educate our members. We also hold a bi-annual conference just for our members. The Section is proud to have an official Academic Advisory Group, which publishes a substantial book every two years on topics of interest to our members. We also publish the highly regarded Journal of Energy and Natural Resources Law on a quarterly basis.

We are dedicated professionals committed to the highest standards of legal practice. We are organised for the express purpose of guaranteeing full exchange of views on legal issues within our areas of expertise. Our objective is to enhance our practice, enhance the profession, and safeguard our shared environment and resources in a manner consistent with the needs of our society and of our clients.
